French pop heritage is littered with smooth and creamy icons: Gainsbourg, Karen Anne, Adamo and Francois Hardy. GaBlé, however, are a completely different kettle de poisson. Wearing their influences on their sleeves – Moldy Peaches, Meat Puppets and early Sonic Youth, they stick a lovely big lump of absolutely bonkers, stinky musical cheese in the face of suave ancestry.

Gablés' debut on LOAF recordings, "7 Guitars with a Cloud of Milk" have one the prestigious best new act award in the French equivalent of the NME, Les Inrocks Magazine. Ever since the band has been touring the Festival circuit in France, playing with heavyweights such as Deerhoof, TV on the Radio, Kap Bambino and Dizzeé Rascal with one-off UK festival shows in The Big Chill and Great Escape.

As far as their live shows go, you can't get any more sensational. Samplers, recorders and a Hoover provide an invigorating backing to the melodic singing, explosive spluttering and just plain daft blurts of these intriguing Frenchmen (and woman). They're charming, interesting and are seriously fun with a surprisingly captivating stage presence for an unassuming 3-piece.

GaBlé will be coming to the UK for a short tour in October:

16th October—Bloody Awful Poetry @ The Enterprise, London
17th October—Cube Cinema, Bristol
18th October—Meze Lounge, Newport
19th October—Dog House, London

"A genuinely experimental act who have not forgotten how to entertain their audience"
