Omo make music that is emotional but focused, full of surprising juxtapositions and lyrical wit.

Omo is a duo comprised of Berit Immig (also a member of pan-European rockers The Chap) and David Muth, formerly part of London based band Karamasov (Satellite Records). Together they make music that they describe as 'Domestic Pop for Domestic Occasions' - not the kind of 'pop' made by Girls Aloud but an altogether more esoteric concoction that is unforgettable once sampled.

'The White Album' is an album that expands your universe whilst you sit comfortably in your armchair. Full of spiky little pop gems, sparkling in the sun, like a collaboration between Laurie Anderson and The Young Marble Giants, mixed by Ricardo Villalobos, with occasional appearances by Enoch Light on vibes and Raymond Scott on synthesiser.

If you're looking for music with depth and character, that is fun and wants top get to know you, meet OMO.
